

The Voice of Collegiate Aviation

What is UAA?

The University Aviation Association (UAA) is the voice of collegiate aviation education to its members, the industry, government and the general public. Through the collective expertise of its members, this nonprofit organization plays a pivotal role in the advancement of degree-granting aviation programs that represent all segments of the aviation industry.

Today, UAA has more than 525 members, including approximately 100 institutions. Through ongoing research, publication, and the sharing of best practices, the organization and its members are well equipped to meet the evolving needs of the aviation industry and the 21st century.

Why should YOU join?

UAA provides a forum for students, faculty, staff, and practitioners to share ideas, to enhance the quality of education, and to develop stronger programs and curricula.

If you want to ensure the quality of collegiate academic programs, UAA is for you. If you want to benefit from the technical expertise and knowledge of professionals from academia and industry, UAA is for you. If you want to influence curricula development, industry standards and aviation policy, UAA is for you. If you want to have an impact on the future of aviation, UAA is for YOU.

What our members say . . .

"UAA provides the opportunity for faculty to connect with their peers at other institutions, allowing the sharing of both best teaching practices and research interests. The organization also serves as the mechanism for presenting a unified voice for collegiate aviation to other constituencies, including the FAA, Congress, and the aviation industry."

Dr. Wendy Beckman
Middle Tennessee State University

"Our participation in the University Aviation Association has provided an ideal venue for learning about the needs and priorities of collegiate aviation programs. It has enabled a dialog with educators through which we are able to contribute experience and expertise to the teaching environment."
